In a deposition June 23, 1841, Lydia Bartlet states:

He entered the service as she believes at Deerfiel or Hatfield Mass at the communicant of the war and was in the battle of Lexington & White Plains and served in Massachusetts Regiment and was informed until the end of the war. He was taken prisoner of war and carried to Montreal and again taken and carried by the Tories to Fort Niagara from whence he escaped and was again taken about a years before the war closed North of Lake Superior and was released after the close of the war. She believes he once enlisted for three years in a Massachusetts Regiment and served that term & then enlisted for the war and served that term & then enlisted for the war and served and was imprisoned until the close of it in 1783. She believes he was acting as Lieutenant at the end of the war and belonged to the Massachusetts troops, but is unable to give the names of the officers under whom he served.
