The next day after he volunteered he marched with said Regiment to Ticonderoga, at the time they arrived at Ticonderoga the British forces were on board the fleet on Lake Champlain anchored off the Fort and were landing their artillery and taking it up Mount Defiance preparatory to an attack upon the Fort, a few days after their arrival the Fort was evacuated by order of General Schuyler or General St. Clair as he understood at the time, does not distinctly recollect which he thinks it was Genl Schuyler don't recollect of seeing Genl St. Clair then, after the evacuation of the Fort he retreated with the troops to Saratoga at which place and in the neighborhood of the same he remained in the service till after the Surrender of Genl Burgoyne on the 17th October in the year – when he was discharged and returned to his home in Salem Washington County he took no written discharge from his officers at the time of leaving the army. On or about the first of May 1778 he enlisted at Salem in Washington County N.Y. under Capt. During these eight months he was stationed alternately at Fort Edward, Fort Miller, Fort Ann, White Hall, and Kingsbury and Fort George as the presence of the forces were most needed at these several places.

In the month of January he returned home to Salem. During the year 1779 he was frequently called out with the militia upon alarms to resist the incursions of the Indians and tories was out in all during this year in such service at least forty days. He recollects that these predatory parties were generally headed by one Pettis a tory who was afterwards taken at Ballston and tried and executed at Albany as he understood and believes.

In Oct 1777 he was in three engagements at Saratoga with the british & Hessian troops. He recollects of assisting in taking from the british an old French Fort of Breastwork situate on the West side of the Hudson near the mouth of Fish Creek and not far from the residence of Genl Schuyler.
